WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

Northern Region

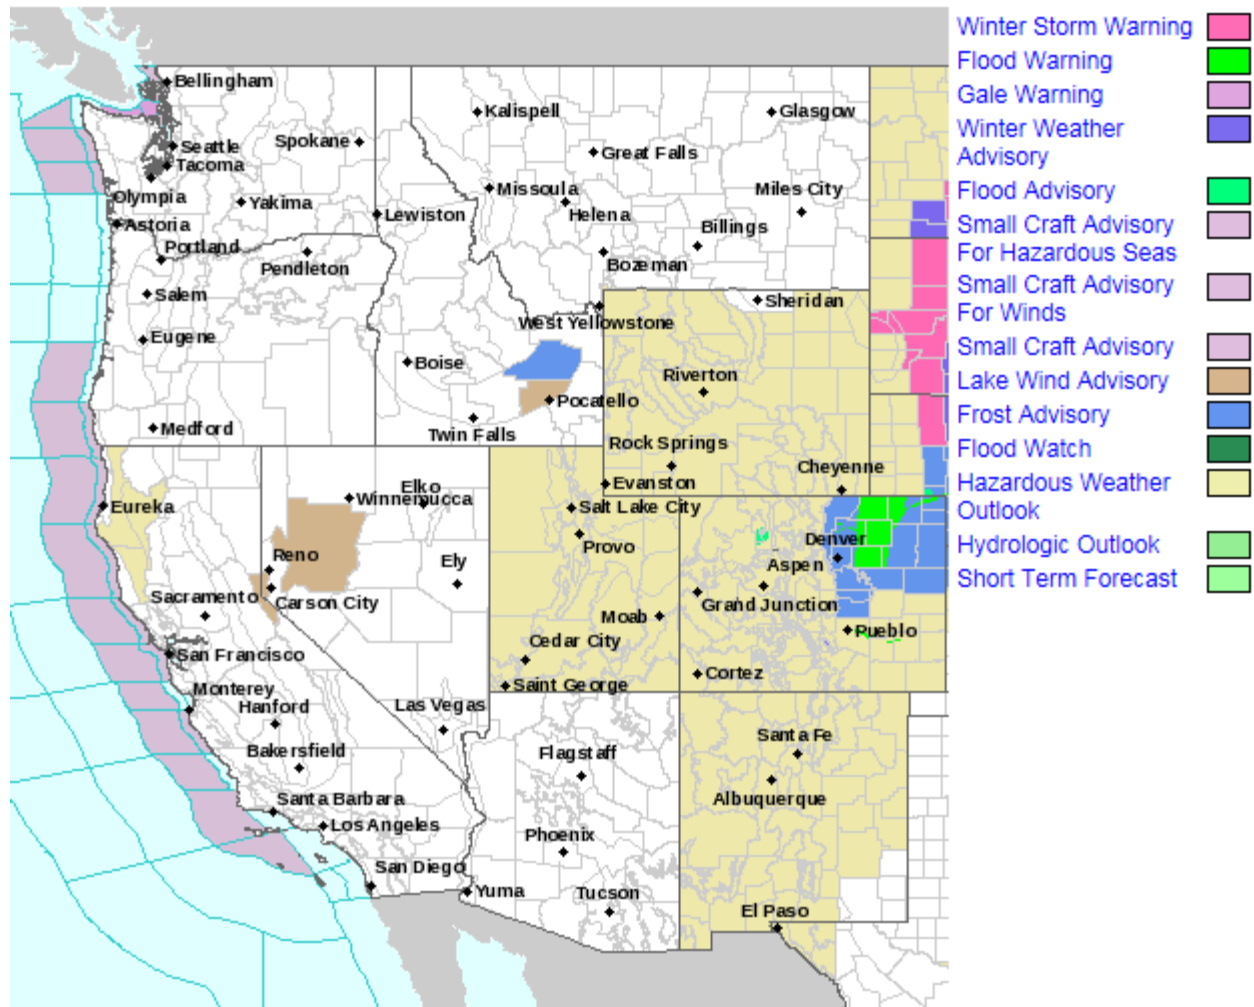

Today will be another day of above normal high temperatures for a lot of areas. Although it will be a few degrees cooler than Saturday, the warmest inland valley areas will still be in the lower and mid-80s. High pressure that was over the region Saturday is moving eastward today as a low pressure trough hanging just off shore takes over our weather pattern. Some fairly light precipitation is expected to develop in the far northern areas later today as a result. An unsettled weather pattern will be with us for the rest of the week. A low moving slowly south over the Pacific Northwest during the next few days will likely keep the far north somewhat moist. Drier conditions are expected mid-week before another low drops south offshore from the Gulf of Alaska to bring widespread moist conditions again late this week into next weekend. Chances for light precipitation will increase in all areas, including snow in the mountains, around 6000 feet and higher. Temperatures will be near to slightly below seasonal norms after today. The warmer inland valleys afternoon highs will be in the 70s much of the next week. Winds will be southerly to westerly at seasonable speeds.

Southern Region

High pressure aloft centered over California will cause temperatures to warm 10 to 15 degrees away from the coast today, with 60s to low 70s in the mountains and mid-70s to mid-80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 20% and 40% today, however, it will be in the teens across the deserts. A slight chance of showers and thunderstorms will still be possible across the Central and Eastern Sierra this afternoon. Winds will be southwest to northwest 5 to 15 mph this afternoon. The high pressure will shift eastward as an area of low pressure forms off the Oregon Coast and moves inland bringing a cooling trend to the region Monday and Tuesday. Another low pressure area will drop down the West Coast and inland across Southern California bringing further cooling Wednesday through Friday. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will form over the Sierra once again Thursday afternoon and then spread across most of the region Thursday night through Friday night. Westerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the desert passes Monday afternoon through the end of this week.
